Get involved
Local 655 member finds niche in political world

Bryan Wucher knows what it feels like to be frustrated about the way government sometimes works, but rather than moan and groan, Wucher decided to get involved.

He started out on his neighborhood association board, working his way up to president. Next he volunteered as a team leader for the Obama campaign out of the Jefferson County Democratic Headquarters. In May, he was appointed to the city of Arnold Planning and Zoning Commission.

“I had a lot of fun with the Obama campaign, and I guess I didn’t realize how much I enjoyed politics,” said Wucher, a 25-year-member of Local 655 and cashier at Dierbergs-Warson Woods. “I feel like if I’m going to live in the community, I want someone in there that I can trust to work in my best interest. If you have someone in office or on a board who would do anything they can do for the community, you’re better off because of it.”

Wucher urges others to get involved—to break up some of the things that go on in politics.

“I’m not saying Democrat or Republican. I’m saying everybody should get involved and support the things that affect your lives,” Wucher said. “On the Planning and Zoning Commission, it’s two meeting nights a month. With paperwork, talking to different people and listening to their views, overall, you’re looking at maybe 3 or 4 days a month. It’s not that much to get involved with the smaller boards.

You just take your spare time and put it to good use.”

Wucher is married to Sandy and has two children, Mark, 3, and Eric, 8. They are residents of Arnold.

Get excited. Get involved!
